

SANTA FE M59

BERETTA

"MAINTAINING THE GUNMAKERS TRADITION . . ."

FOR HUNTERS

The smooth functioning semi-auto mechanism has been exhaustively tested with .308 sporting ammunition as provided by leading American manufacturers in every bullet weight loading. With a semi-automatic system, time proven through the use of millions of M1 Garand rifles, the hunter is assured the utmost in accuracy and reliability under all conditions of weather and temperature.

FOR COLLECTORS

The M59 qualifies in every respect as a weapon which belongs in every serious rifle collection. A remarkable combination of two great firearms theorists (Beretta and Garand), the M59 has several other attributes which qualify it as a desirable collector's piece. It is the first Beretta licensed arm to be made in another country. It's the final evolution of the Garand rifle, and, in this semi-automatic configuration, it is in extremely limited supply. Its value will continue to appreciate.

FOR TARGET SHOOTERS

With the general unavailability of the M-14 Rifle (due to its full automatic feature) the serious American Military Match target shooter will find in the M-59 the nucleus of a national match quality rifle that will compete favorably against the M1, M14, F/M, etc. With proper tuning the M-59 is a winner.

New Beretta-Licensed Lightweight Semi-Automatic Rifle

The M59 is the first great sporting arm designed from modern post-World War II weaponry. Designed by the world famed technicians of Armi Beretta, Gardone Valrompia (Brescia), Italy, this superlative rifle corrects the problems of recoil and upward deflection found in nearly all military and sporting rifles up to the present day. Its ability to deliver aimed fire and to hold on stationary or moving targets is absolutely unsurpassed.
